Trump taps fracking company executive for energy secretary

President-elect Donald Trump announced Saturday that Chris Wright is his nominee to lead the Department of Energy.

Wright, who must be approved by the Senate, is the chief executive of Liberty Energy – the world's second-largest fracking services company – and is one of the industry's most outspoken critics of the effort to combat climate change.

"There is no climate crisis, and we're not in the midst of an energy transition either," Wright said in a video posted to LinkedIn last year.
